

2014 Tribute to Jimmie Angel Expedition to Angel Falls Rescheduled to 2015

After much discussion, Expedition Co-leader Paul Stanley and I reached the conclusion that the 2014 Tribute to Jimmie Angel Expedition to Angel Falls should be rescheduled to 2015.

Paul, our man in Venezuela, has been in touch with me on a regular basis and he is presently reporting disturbances in Venezuela, you may have seen reports on this yourself; there are sizeable demonstrations on the streets against the present regime in charge. He also reports a huge problem with all of the major international airlines. The Venezuelan government owes a substantial amount of money to all of them so they have either cancelled regular flights or made it impossible to buy tickets (as flights have been seriously reduced) at the present time. People have looked into flights and have seen this personally.

Paul also confirms that he is still receiving clients on a weekly basis as well as a constant flow of enquiries and tours are proceeding without issue. However, in spite of this, a number of people that were interested in travelling with us expressed sufficient concern (after seeing the breaking news) and either cancelled or have postponed their trip with us for this year. Most are still eager to come but would rather wait until the situation in Venezuela is less volatile.

All of the above situations made me rethink the trip for this year – so with deep regret I made the decision to postpone it and rearrange the date for next year. Please see the posting for the 2015 trip.

I hope you understand and I am truly sorry for having to cancel the 2014 Expedition, but for myself and a large contingent of those who were interested, I believe this is for the best, especially for peace of mind.

Please contact me directly if you have any comments or concerns.
